EDUCSPE 313 A Cognitive Approach to Prejudice Reduction 3 Units
Terms offered: Prior to 2007
As our schools become increasingly diverse in composition, our students seem to know less and less about each other. They tend to rely on stereotypes rather than to learn about and interact with people. The result is prejudice which is a prejudgement not based on knowledge, has several origins, of which a major one is lack of cognitive skills. This course will present and examine research on the cognitive processes which affect prejudiced thinking and will apply that research to the classroom.
