HUM R1A Global Humanities I: From California to the Global 4 Units

Terms offered: Prior to 2007

This reading and writing intensive course is organized around key texts that focus on ever-widening parameters of scale: the local, the national-regional, and the global. Each level, - California, America and the Americas, and the world - is designated by representative literary texts, from those focused on the Bay Area to those reaching out to the planetary. The course fulfills the first half of the reading and composition requirement (R1A). Success in this course depends upon deep reading, ongoing participation, substantive interaction with a peer review group, and steady commitment to the composition and revision of several essays.

HUM R1B Global Humanities II: Old World, New World, Our World 4 Units

Terms offered: Prior to 2007

This reading and writing intensive course is organized around three modules: "Old World," dealing with the Eurasian landmass over the classical and early modern eras; "New World," dealing with the Americas, and "Our World," dealing with the globalized world we live in today. We will thus be exploring a series of texts organized both historically and geographically, from antiquity to the present, and from the transcontinental to the global. The course fulfills the goals of the second half of the reading and composition requirement (R1B). Success in this course depends upon deep reading, ongoing participation, and steady commitment to the composition and revision of two progressively longer research essays.

HUM 133AC Hidden in Plain Sight: Public History in Public Space 3 Units

Terms offered: Summer 2022 8 Week Session

This course explores the ways history and memory are represented or erased in public space and how this affects policies and futures. We will examine monuments, public art, streets, parks, museums, archives, performative traditions and virtual space. Students will propose ways of representing history in public space as a way to shape future histories. We will explore the concept of "public history" and study artistic and literary representations of the past. We will consider the ways that city planning and urban design have used or ignored memory and meaning. Highlighting landscapes shaped by economic inequality, migration, incarceration, and racism, we will analyze what is hidden, forgotten, missing, or in need of representation.
