Philosophy

Overview

Undergraduate

The Philosophy Department offers a major and minor in philosophy, as well as a minor in logic. Qualified majors in philosophy have the further option of entering the honors program. Details on the requirements for a major in philosophy (http://philosophy.berkeley.edu/undergraduate/overview/#major), minor in philosophy (http://philosophy.berkeley.edu/undergraduate/overview/#minor), minor in logic (http://philosophy.berkeley.edu/undergraduate/overview/#minor-logic), and honors in philosophy (http://philosophy.berkeley.edu/undergraduate/overview/#honors).

Graduate

The graduate program in philosophy at Berkeley offers a first-rate faculty, a stimulating and friendly community of graduate students, and the resources of one of the world’s finest research universities.

Two features distinguish our profile from that of other leading graduate programs in philosophy:

• The department has strengths in all the main areas of philosophy, including epistemology, philosophy of mind, metaphysics, philosophy of language, logic, ethics, the history of philosophy, and philosophy of science. We aim at diversity and breadth of coverage, rather than concentration on one or two areas of philosophical activity.

• Second, the program at Berkeley is structured to give students a high degree of independence in tailoring their studies to their interests.

PHILOS W12A Introduction to Logic 4 Units
Terms offered: Summer 2019 8 Week Session, Summer 2018 8 Week Session
Intended as a first course in logic for students with no previous exposure to the subject, the course treats symbolic logic. Students will learn to formalize reasoning in symbolic languages with precisely defined meanings and rules of inference. Symbolic logic is by nature a mathematical subject, but the course does not presuppose any prior coursework in mathematics—only an openness to mathematical reasoning.

The course concentrates on three systems of symbolic logic: propositional logic (or sentential logic); syllogistic logic; and predicate logic (or first-order logic). Students from philosophy, mathematics, computer science, and linguistics will find important connections between symbolic logic and their other coursework.

PHILOS 127 Rationality and Irrationality in Science 3 Units
Terms offered: Spring 2004
Science is often regarded as preeminently rational. Yet recent work in philosophy, history and sociology of science suggests that scientific knowledge is no more rationally established than other sorts of knowledge, and that scientists’ convictions are driven more by party loyalty and ego than by a pureminded pursuit of truth. This course will consider the case for and against the rationality of science. It will also consider the recent controversy concerning “scientific” creationism.

PHILOS 133 Philosophy of Language 4 Units
Terms offered: Spring 2019, Summer 2018 Second 6 Week Session, Spring 2018
An introduction to central topics in the philosophy of language, for example the nature of linguistic meaning, the relation of meaning to truth and reference, knowledge of language, the relation of language to thought, pragmatic aspects of linguistic communication, and skepticism about linguistic meaning. Some previous background in philosophy and logic is required.
Prerequisites: 12A and one other Philosophy course, or consent of the instructor

PHILOS 135 Theory of Meaning 4 Units
Terms offered: Summer 2019 First 6 Week Session, Fall 2018, Spring 2018
Language as social behavior. Language compared to other sign systems. The foundations of semantics, truth, meaning, reference. Issues of logical form in belief sentences, indirect discourse, sentences about causality, events, actions. Relations between thought and language.
Prerequisites: One course in logic or consent of instructor

PHILOS 134 Form and Meaning 4 Units
Terms offered: Fall 2015, Fall 2011
How is the meaning of a whole sentence determined by the meanings of its parts, and by its structure? This question is addressed in empirical semantic theories for natural language. The character and content of such theories has been a central concern both of the philosophy of language and of recent linguistics, and it is the central focus of this course.
Prerequisites: Eight units of philosophy courses and 12A (or equivalent)

PHILOS 136 Philosophy of Perception 4 Units
Terms offered: Fall 2015, Fall 2014, Fall 2013
The philosophy of perception is a microcosm of the metaphysics of mind. Its central problems - What is perception? What is the nature of perceptual consciousness? How can one fit an account of perceptual experience into a broader account of the nature of the mind and the world? - are problems at the heart of metaphysics. It is often justifiably said that the theory of perception (and especially vision) is the area of psychology and neuroscience that has made the greatest progress in recent years. Despite this progress, or perhaps because of it, philosophical problems about perception retain a great urgency, both for philosophy and for science.
Prerequisites: One previous course in philosophy is recommended
PHILOS 138 Philosophy of Society 4 Units
Terms offered: Fall 2016, Spring 2015, Spring 2014
This course deals with the ontology of society and thus provides a foundation for the social sciences. The main questions discussed are: 1) What is the mode of existence of social reality? 2) How does it relate to psychological and physical reality? 3) What implications does social ontology have for social explanations?
