Interdisciplinary Studies

The Interdisciplinary Studies Field Major (ISF) is part of the Office of Undergraduate and Interdisciplinary Studies (UGIS) in the College of Letters and Science. It is one of many interdisciplinary programs, but only one of two (with American Studies) that requires a senior thesis of each major. ISF offers students the unique opportunity to develop an individualized cross-disciplinary Research Program that includes a Course of Study and a Senior Thesis. The Course of Study is made up of courses taken in the social sciences, the humanities, and/or the professional schools and colleges. Each student, with the help of a faculty advisor, follows a coherent Course of Study drawing on upperdivision courses. Each student also, under the direction of a faculty advisor, produces a 30-40 page Senior Thesis, a sustained inquiry, based on original, cross-disciplinary research.

ISF has identified a number of Interdisciplinary Research Fields that have engendered excellent scholarship and attracted students across campus. Although ISF students may pursue other research fields identified in consultation with ISF faculty and academic advisors, the ISF Research Fields provide models and resources about scholarly interests shared by many ISF students and across campus. Research fields are dynamic bodies of knowledge that form and develop through a series of debates articulated around a given set of interdisciplinary topics, research questions, and theories. The Research Fields found on the ISF website are there to help ISF students identify their own research interests and customize their own research program and course of study.

Admission

Students must apply to the ISF Major with a well-conceived Research Program, including a proposed course of study and an intellectual justification of their proposed study. Research programs must be interdisciplinary, integrating methodological or theoretical approaches from at least three academic disciplines (departments or programs). Interdisciplinary work may be comparative, historical, regional, thematic, or problem-focused. The Research Program should not replicate an existing major. The purpose of the ISF major is to allow undergraduates to combine work across disciplines in courses and with faculty where no other structured program exists. Finally, the Research Program must be feasible, and the Senior Thesis must answer a manageable research question in a semester's hard work (ISF 190). Each student's proposed Research Program is discussed with and approved by a faculty advisor to assure feasibility, but the final responsibility lies with the student.

The ISF Major emphasizes the role of the faculty advisor and the student-advisor relationship. The nature of the major requires repeated elaboration of the proposed Research Program, Course of Study, and Senior Thesis that best combines students' individual research interests and the ISF program goals. Students are assigned an advisor upon acceptance into the major, although faculty members outside ISF may serve as advisors when appropriate, as approved by the ISF Director.

ISF 10 Enduring Questions and Great Books of the Western Tradition 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2022, Fall 2021, Fall 2020

This course is a broad survey of major canonical works ("Great Books") emphasizing from the premodern traditions of Western Civilization since the Greeks. These texts offer responses to central questions that, across the disciplinary divides, continue to inform contemporary work in the social sciences and the humanities. By considering these enduring questions and the responses of writers in Ancient, Medieval, Early Modern, and Modern Europe, we seek to examine core issues of the liberal arts as they find expression across what would later become disciplinary divisions.

Objectives & Outcomes

Course Objectives: To offer students an intense engagement with canonical thinkers of the western tradition, demonstrating the enduring nature of their queries and questions across the disciplines of the social sciences and humanities.

Student Learning Outcomes: Students are expected to acquire a familiarity with many core debates in the western intellectual tradition, and to be able to identify the pre-disciplinary and interdisciplinary roots of contemporary inquiries in the social sciences and humanities.

ISF 50 Interdisciplinary Perspectives on Artificial Intelligence 3 Units

Terms offered: Spring 2019

It's hard not to open a newspaper or magazine today and see claims being made for artificial intelligence. Advocates argue that software programs will now be able to even perform creative jobs (as opposed to just routine ones) and that this is both a matter of celebration and concern. Critics argue that these claims are hyperbolic, while others argue that they are too close to reality and an indication of how much autonomy we have ceded to machines. In this course, we will pick apart all of these claims. We will ask: how have different human societies conceived of "intelligence," natural or artificial, and how has this varied with place and time?

ISF 60 Technology and Values 3 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2023, Fall 2020, Spring 2018 If science and technology are value-laden activities, then where exactly do the values lie? In this class, we will pick apart the black-box of science and technology and look for values not just in terms of bad actors, corruption, or "implications," but in the processes that constitute modern technoscience itself. These processes include: the ways in which researchers construct problems, solutions, facts, and artifacts; the norms, standards, stories, and patronage relations that underlie science and technology; and finally, how the future is imagined and realized. Readings will include academic and journalistic texts as well as science fiction.

ISF 61 Moral Reasoning and Human Action: The Quest for Judgment 3 Units

Terms offered: Spring 2017, Fall 2016, Spring 2015

This is an interdisciplinary survey course that seeks to understand how we define justice, evil, and individual responsibility in modern society. In particular we are going to probe carefully how humans reflect on and practice the process of moral reasoning. We will focus on human behavior in extreme situations: war, life and death conflicts, genocide and mass killing, as well as competing conceptions of human freedom. The course has a distinctive dual purpose. On the one hand we want to encourage the learning of critical thinking skills. This includes the ability to systematically evaluate information and competing moral claims. Also, it is intended as an exposure to the interdisciplinary approach. That is, how can different perspectives illuminate the same issue? With this in mind the course draws on important work from philosophy and ethics, social psychology, jurisprudential analysis, historical-political accounts, and personal memoirs.

ISF 62 Representations of Self-Deception in the Modern World 3 Units

In this course, we will utilize works in the humanities and the social sciences in order to explore a number of dimensions of self-deception in the modern world. The focus will be upon the willingness to falsify both personal life as well as one's position in the public sphere. The course will begin with an examination of the psychological dimension, emphasizing the importance of the nature of unconscious experience. In this context, we will examine how self-awareness is shaped by personal relationships, especially family arrangements. In addition, we will look at the manner in which people often engage in acts of self-deception with regard to the political realm.

ISF 100A Introduction to Social Theory and Cultural Analysis 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025, Spring 2025, Fall 2024

This course, required of all ISF majors but open to all students, provides an introduction to the works of foundational social theorists of the nineteenth century, including Karl Marx and Max Weber. Writing in what might be called the "pre disciplinary" period of the modern social sciences, their works cross the boundaries of anthropology, economics, history, political science, sociology, and are today claimed by these and other disciplines as essential texts. We will read intensively and critically from their respective works, situating their intellectual contributions in the history of social transformations wrought by industrialization and urbanization, political revolution, and the development of modern consumer society.

ISF 100B Interdisciplinary Theories of the Self and Identity 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025, Summer 2025 Second 6 Week Session, Spring 2024

This course will explore how people come to develop and value the self as well their specific social identities. The course will draw on anthropology, sociology, neurobiology and philosophy to grapple with that which is most intimate yet often most opaque to us: our own selves. Yet we shall also explore the cultural limits of our unstable understanding of our individuated selves as well as the dialectic of self and other in the formation of identity.

ISF 100E Globalization of Human Rights and Humanitarian Laws 4 Units

Terms offered: Summer 2025 Second 6 Week Session, Summer 2020 First 6 Week Session, Summer 2019 First 6 Week Session

The violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, growing use of Al and drone technology in warfare, ill treatment of detainees and failure to protect people's basic rights by the state, international community and non-state actors have plagued today's globalized world. Gross human rights violations happen on camera. This course aims to critically examine the strengths and weaknesses of the global human rights regime, the limitations of the state-centric human rights protection mechanism, the current controversies about genocide, ethnic cleansing, war crimes, apartheid and occupation, collective punishment, and rights to self-defense, and the prospect for peace, security and social justice in the era of globalization.

ISF 100F Theorizing Modern Capitalism: Controversies and Interpretations 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025, Fall 2024, Fall 2023

The focus of this course will be on the various ways the nature and trajectory of modern capitalism has been interpreted. Our stress will be on post-Marxist works of analysis. The initial focal point will be on the work of Max Weber and Joseph Schumpeter, as well as important current debates in economic history and social theory generated by their work. Both Weber and Schumpeter display a strong fascination and elaboration with the work of Marx. The way they analyze Marx is very revealing about the way contemporary analysts seek to understand the capitalist system. We will also consider a number of current efforts that look at the systemic nature of capitalism. In particular, we are interested in how economic historians now see the development of capitalism. We also want to examine the Weberian tradition in terms of the role of culture in shaping economic behavior. Debates about the nature of globalization will also be considered as well as analysis of the changing nature of work.

ISF 100I Consumer Society and Culture 4 Units

Terms offered: Summer 2025 First 6 Week Session, Spring 2025, Summer 2024 Second 6 Week Session

In many ways, consumption defines our lives — our identities as consumers are even more important, some would argue, our identities as workers or producers. But what are the implications of a society in which "you are what you consume?" In this class, we will address questions such as: Under what conditions does a "consumer society" develop? What does global commodity chain tell us about colonialization, global inequality, and environmental injustice? How can we shape the life cycle of basic commodities—from raw materials to iPhones--in a socially sustainable way? This course will be interdisciplinary in its attempt to understand consumer society and culture in terms of political economy, geography, history, anthropology and sociology.

Objectives & Outcomes

Course Objectives: The goal of this course is to provide students with a broad overview of debates and theories about consumption, and to provide them with an opportunity to explore a consumption-related topic themselves.

ISF 100J The Social Life of Computing 4 Units

Terms offered: Spring 2025, Spring 2024, Spring 2023 In this class, we will look at computing as a social phenomenon: to see it not just as a technology that transforms but to see it as a technology that has evolved, and is being put to use, in very particular ways, by particular groups of people. We will be doing this by employing a variety of methods, primarily historical and ethnographic, oriented around a study of practices. We will pay attention to technical details but ground these technical details in social organization (a term whose meaning should become clearer and clearer as the class progresses). We will study the social organization of computing around different kinds of hardware, software, ideologies, and ideas.

ISF 100K Health, Wealth, Love, and Happiness 4 Units

Terms offered: Spring 2025, Spring 2024, Spring 2023
Health, wealth, love, and happiness are the most desirable yet tenuous elements of a satisfying life. To achieve them, there has been an overemphasis on wealth accumulation or economic growth. But does economic growth automatically translate into health, love, and happiness? When our environment is degraded with an increasing depletion of natural resources, can we live healthily and happily? Is economic growth sustainable without a healthy planet and healthy people? How do we achieve health, wealth, love, and happiness without harming nature and society? This course will critically examine these and other questions from an interdisciplinary perspective.

Objectives & Outcomes

Student Learning Outcomes: Upon completion of this course, students will learn about:

- the main concepts, theories and controversies linking health to broader social and economic development:
- the social, political, demographic and epidemiologic determinants of health in relation to levels of economic development:
- the effect of economic policy, globalization, climate change, and urbanization on health:
- the main components of an effective healthcare policy;
- how to compare health policies of different countries;
- how policy shapes health and development in the developed and the developing world how health inequities within and between countries affect human development.

ISF 110 Fundamental Texts 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025, Spring 2022, Spring 2019

This course examines how thinkers have grappled with questions from ancient debates on justice and political order to contemporary critiques of liberal democracy. As a "great books" course, this class involves the extensive but rewarding reading of foundational texts. These includes works by thinkers such as Plato, Rousseau, Kant, Mill, Foucault, and Shklar. We will trace key shifts in political thought, from classical ideals of governance to modern debates on sovereignty, democracy, and capitalism. By engaging with foundational texts, students will gain a deeper understanding of the political structures that shape our world as well as the intellectual traditions in which they are embedded.

Terms offered: Fall 1995

What is theory and why should we engage with it? In what way does it inform our methods of interpreting literary and cultural production? How can theory enable us to formulate forms of critique? In this course, we will survey some of the most important theoretical traditions and methods from the 19th-21st century. The course is organized around three conceptual clusters that will allow us to trace lines of influence across centuries and theoretical traditions: 1. Commodity, Consciousness, Affect; 2. Colonialism, Race, Other; 3. Climate, Species, Entanglement. Each cluster will be paired with a literary study text to highlight the ways in which theory can inform methods of reading and analysis. ISF 190 Senior Thesis 4 Units

Terms offered: Fall 2025, Spring 2025, Fall 2024

The ISF Senior Thesis requirement is the capstone experience and final product of the ISF major. The thesis is a sustained, original, and critical examination of a central interdisciplinary research question, developed under the guidance of the ISF 190 instructor. The thesis represents a mature synthesis of research skills, critical thinking, and competent writing. As the final product of a student's work in the major, the thesis is not the place to explore a new set of disciplines or research problems for the first time, but should develop methods of inquiry and bridge the several disciplines that students have developed in their course of study.
